Council of 100 Coming to San Francisco

The next meeting of OSCRE’s Council of 100 will convene in San Francisco in early October, and provide a forum for senior leaders to collaborate on the big issues facing the industry that need action. The discussion continues from Chicago with a focus on developing a template to assist organizations in building a digital ecosystem and review of a self-assessment tool for data maturity to help organizations get started. Breakout discussions focused on the targeted needs of corporate real estate and investment in addition to the general sessions will be included. Interested in learning more about how you can join the Council of 100? Please email us at lori.walters@oscre.org for more information.

OSCRE Launches New Learning Lab - Data Governance in Real Estate

OSCRE launched a new format for its Data Governance in Real Estate program with a two-day Learning Lab in New York City July 23-24. The Data Governance Learning Lab is a 2-day intensive, hands-on program that includes a case study to guide implementation and a group project to apply data governance skills. Many thanks to Cohn Reznick for hosting the event in their Innovation Lab and for their participation in the Learning Lab. Candidates for the Data Governance in Real Estate Certificate joined us from global organizations from the major sectors in the real estate industry, including corporate real estate, investment management, service providers, software developers and consultants. They recognize data governance in real estate as critically important to their ability to grow as information-enabled organizations and shared their perspectives throughout the course.

OSCRE now offers open Learning Labs for professionals from multiple organizations hosted in major markets, or proprietary offerings for individual organizations interested in fast-tracking their team’s data governance skill set highlights of the Data Governance Learning Lab format includes:

- Techniques to help build core data governance capabilities.
- Role-specific perspectives, such as functional leads, business analysts, IT project leads, data governance managers and more.
- A self-assessment of current levels of maturity and plans for the next 2 years.
- Lessons learned on how to improve data maturity levels.
- Working in teams to solve typical challenges to moving ahead with data governance.
- A case study on how one global organization implemented data governance in their real estate organization.

If you’re interested in attending one of OSCRE’s Learning labs, or would like to hold one for your organization, please contact us at info@oscre.org.

It’s about the Data

As organizations grapple with the ever-expanding quantity of data collected and what to do with it to achieve better outcomes, the discussion focuses on how to build an effective approach to data governance. By its nature, effective data governance requires a standardized approach to data.
collaborative effort within organizations and with your business partners goes a long way to ensure an optimal approach that addresses the needs of all stakeholders. OSCRE’s focus has expanded to include a reference data model approach to standards, training programs to build skills in data governance and digital competency, and the Council of 100 to serve as a forum for relevant discussion and collaborative action. We are committed to working with the industry to transforming the way digital information drives your real estate business. If you’re not currently a member, we have several membership options available and invite you to join us.

Learn at your own pace with our Certificate Programs:

Building Digital Competency in Real Estate on-demand Certificate program
It's about doing things right, engaging the right people, developing the right skills, and putting the right framework in place. Learn more here

Data Governance in Real Estate on-demand Certificate program
This 10-session program is presented by industry professionals, giving you access to their knowledge, experience, and guidance on how to apply it to your own organization. Learn more here

Welcome new OSCRE members
Please join us in welcoming new OSCRE corporate executive members WeWork (www.wework.com) and Chevron (www.chevron.com), who have also joined the Council of 100.

Join OSCRE now!
Follow us on LinkedIn